Info

Dragées 101, Font Guide, and EL KAISSI Story.

DISCOVER & EVALUATE

Choosing the right dragée depends on both visual appeal and functional qualities; an informed evaluation ensures the right match for every application.

Grade of the Center

The center is the foundation of every dragée. Almonds are the most traditional choice, with Mediterranean origins prized for their size and flavor. Higher-grade dragées often use larger kernels, balanced with proportionate coating. For chocolate centers, quality is defined by cocoa content and the refinement of the blend, which together determine smoothness and depth of taste.

Treatment of the Center

Before coating, selected centers must be carefully prepared to preserve their integrity. Slow drying or gently roasting enhances natural aromas and ensures a crisp texture. Proper pre-coating treatment is essential for a quality dragée; shortcuts at this stage often result in dragées that crack, blister, or show uneven, rough coating.

Coating Layers

The hallmark of craftsmanship is a thin, smooth, and perfectly even shell. In sugar dragées, the finest grades achieve a delicate coating that protects the center without overwhelming it. For chocolate dragées, the layer should be consistent and silky, delivering a rich chocolate experience while still allowing the center’s character to shine.

Surface Finishing

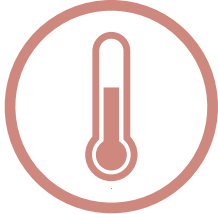

The appearance of a dragée reflects the care with which it was made. Whether polished to a glossy sheen, presented in matte elegance, finished with delicate dusting, or enhanced with pearlescent tones, the finish must be even and refined, with no streaks, cracks, or irregularities. A flawless surface is the ultimate signature of quality.

Dragées 101

STORE & HANDLE

The quality of a dragée is preserved as much in storage as it is achieved in production. Proper handling ensures every piece retains its texture, flavor, and flawless finish until it reaches the customer.

Temperature: 18–22°C

Excessive heat destabilizes fats, causing surface cracks in sugar coatings and deformation or bloom in chocolate shells, along with a loss of finish. Lower-than-recommended temperatures, on the other hand, make coatings brittle and prone to breakage.

Humidity: 40–60%

Moisture is the greatest enemy of coated products. High humidity leads to condensation, dulling the surface and damaging colors, while low humidity makes shells fragile. Stability is essential.

Avoid Strong Odors

Dragées readily absorb external aromas. Keep away from spices, perfumes, smoke, or exhaust, as well as incompatible foods. Even handling while wearing perfume can compromise their taste.

Protect From Light

Natural or artificial light, direct or ambient, fades delicate pigments. Both intensity and duration of exposure accelerate degradation. Opaque storage preserves vibrancy and color homogeneity until display, presentation, or consumption.

Handle With Care

Thin sugar shells can fracture more easily than glass, while uncoated chocolate is inherently fragile. Handle gently, avoid bulk pouring, and never use sharp tools as scoops.

Seal After Use

Always reseal open packs to protect against moisture, odors, and contamination, ensuring both freshness and presentation.

EL KAISSI STORY

Founded in 1942 as a small chocolate and confectionery workshop, EL KAISSI has grown into a distinguished name in the art of dragée making. From our early beginnings to our specialization in almonds dragées in the 1960s, through the launch of sugar-coated chocolate in the 1990s, and the introduction of chocolate-coated dragées in the 2010s, each milestone has reflected our pursuit of excellence and innovation.

Today, EL KAISSI is a leader in the Lebanese and Middle Eastern markets, with a presence extending to Europe, North America, and Asia. Our dragées are shared on tables and in gift boxes, bringing refinement and joy to celebrations worldwide.

At the heart of our success lies a commitment to excellence. From sourcing the finest ingredients to mastering advanced manufacturing, we bring tradition and innovation together to create dragées of uncompromising quality. This dedication extends to every detail – from refining processes to developing new creations – ensuring that each dragée reflects both our heritage and our vision for the future.
